[00:21:19] So, yeah. What are your goal after graduation?

[00:21:28] My goal after graduation? Well, right now I have an internship with Halliburton. And so I, it's a multi summer program, so I know that I will kind of be working towards a full time job with them. So I think right now my- my goal is to work with Halliburton for a couple of years. I know that I'll be like I'll have. I believe that I'll have like a leadership position once I graduate. And I have been working with Halliburton for so long. So that's my goal for now, is to just work with them for a couple years, gain experience. I have a lot of different career goals. One of them is possibly working for the FBI. I know that they do prefer applicants who have like engineering degrees and engineering backgrounds also with engineering experience. So that's an option that I would go into the FBI if I get accepted. If not, then I also have another like- my biggest career goal is probably to own my own business. And my business would be ultimately and I want my business to be for engineers, for current engineers who are already graduated and have their diploma. And I kind of want a business where it brings in engineers and teaches them how to build their communication skills. Because like I said before, a lot of engineers, they just don't have any communication skills. A lot of engineers lack that when that's like the most important thing. I feel like a lot of engineers don't know how to take the complex terms and bring them down to more simpler terms. It is easy to understand for everybody. And so I want more of like a program and a business to teach engineers how to do that and how to have great presentation skills and how to take their idea and kind of bring it to life and especially share it to other people, kind of know how to pitch yourself and your idea. That's my biggest career goal. I don't know how I'll get there, but I'll get there.
